After Queen Amidala explained her plan to retake Naboo from the droid armies of the Trade Federation, Boss Nass agreed that the Gungans would go to the plains to distract the droid army so the Queen and her party could infiltrate Theed Palace. Boss Nass had forgiven Jar Jar Binks for all of his idiosyncrasies and allowed him to take part in the battle—an occurrence Jar Jar wasn't very happy about.

Out on the battlefield, the Gungans had started up their shield generators and were all well protected under the blankets of blast-deterring plasma that surrounded their entire army. The AATs were completely ineffective against the Gungans' brilliant organic technology.

The tables turned, however, when the Trade Federation's MTTs opened their doors and revealed the racks of battle droids contained within. The droids were able to break through and ultimately shut down the Gungans' shields. After a strong and well-fought battle, the Gungans were surrounded by the droids. This Podracer piloted an oversized, garishly painted, awkward craft that contained twin-turbined Vokoff-Strood Plug-8G 927 Cluster Array engines. An open-air channel in the center of the engine cluster allowed these enormous engines the cooling they needed to sustain the high speeds involved with Podracing. While they looked ungainly, these engines offered the pilot the speed he needed—he hated getting anyone pass him.

D'ya Fanquita, acting on orders of Gardulla the Hutt, hired him to sabotage Anakin Skywalker's Podracer so the boy would have no chance of winning the race. This podracer, who Skywalker had nearly overtaken in a previous race, jumped at the chance to ensure that the boy would have no way to beat him.

This member of the Jedi Council was born in squalor on the smuggler's moon Nar Shaddaa, a slimy criminal hotbed orbiting Nal Hutta. This planet is a dark reflection of Coruscant, completely covered in interlocking spaceports that harbor criminals, smugglers, thieves, bounty hunters, and any other underworld characters hoping to evade justice.

It was no surprise, then, that this Jedi's abilities were not discovered until he was older. It was a widely accepted rule that in order to be fully and completely trained as a Jedi Knight, one had to start near infancy, so this Jedi almost missed his chance to train. This species is descended from colonial Duros travelers who settled away from their homeworld. They have the exact same genetic structure as Duros, but have adapted to an entirely different way of life. While Duros are preoccupied with space travel and exploration, their genetic cousins are much greedier and fiscally motivated. Money and power drive them to their goals, and they are raised to believe that those two things are all that matter in life.

Brought up from eggs, these aliens are thrown into a colony situation at birth and have limited access to food. Their keepers believe that the lesson to be learned is that he who hoards the most will be the one who ends up on top. Many of their young die due to starvation; the adults feel that those were the weak ones, who did not deserve to live. Those who survive leave their colony at age seven, instilled with an intense fear of death and a severe sense of greed.

Due to these two learned traits, these aliens are keen businessmen, amassing great fortune, sometimes by nefarious means. They shy away from battle, fleeing the scene or sending other, more gullible, toadies to do their dirty work. What is this species?

This orange-skinned species is native to a planet in the Expansion Region. Their society and economy are based on technology and their lives are family-based. Many generations of a family may live together, and couples begin having children almost immediately after marriage.

The atmosphere on their planet consists of helium and a mysterious gaseous substance unique to their system. These hairless beings have adapted so thoroughly to the gases in their atmosphere that they cannot breathe or see in other atmospheres without using equipment designed to provide them a constant supply of these gases.

They must be fitted with an antiox breathing mask and goggles in order to travel offworld. The masks are equipped with tubes that extend downward from their faces and supply a constant flow of atmospheric isotopes equal to those of their homeworld's. This species also fits its offworld dwellings with air locks so they can create artificial atmospheres similar to that found on their planet. The goggles they wear when offworld keep their eyes from burning and actually improve their eyesight.

Although they're technically amphibians and get along perfectly above or under water, this species, native to the swamplands of Naboo, is covered in thick, leathery scales. These scales are soft at birth but harden as these creatures mature. They are also born with gills that are absorbed into their bodies as they age. These creatures sometimes knock down trees to reach their fruits and berries, but they are also happy to consume underwater plants.

In the wild, these slow, lumbering creatures travel in herds of up to twelve, but in captivity they are kept in groups of three. Gungans have domesticated these dimwitted, docile creatures and use them as beasts of burden and transport. They also use this creature's skin to make saddles. Gungan breeding herds of these creatures are often so large that they keep them in their sacred places or in the swamps.

The Boonta Eve Classic is one of the most popular and profitable Podrace circuits in the Outer Rim, attracting fans from all over the galaxy eager to watch Podracers battle it out to see who is the bravest, the fastest, and in some cases, the most devious.

The circuit's starting point is the immense Mos Espa Arena. Podracers zoom past the starting line through Starlite Flats and on into Waldo Flats and the treacherous curves of Waldo Cradle to reach Mushroom Mesa, a dangerous field of outcroppings where Podracers must careen through alternating harsh sunlight and shadow in order to move on to Ebe Crater Valley. The next section of the course contains such dangerous turns that some have been named Diablo Cut, Dead Man's Turn, and Stone Needle.

On non-race days, daring would-be pilots race their own skyhoppers and landspeeders to test their skill. When Anakin Skywalker found the structural framework of a protocol droid, he carried it home in hopes of creating a functioning droid to relieve some of his mother's workload. Many parts had been stripped from the droid's frame, most of which was well over eighty years old, but Anakin scrounged what he needed from Watto's shop or wherever he could. He even built some of the parts himself.

This fortunate droid contains a very important piece of hardware: a TranLang III communications module, which Anakin smuggled out of Watto's shop from a droid that Gardulla the Hutt had destroyed. Although he was largely finished, C-3PO still had some kinks that needed to be worked out. In order to create a particularly deadly weapon, this being had to build a specialized furnace from plans housed in an ancient Sith Holocron. Producing this device was one of his fondest memories—the care he took in building it proved how deep and intense his devotion to this underground sect was.

He chose to build a weapon that was primarily used as a training device. Due to its dangerous nature, this weapon had to be wielded by someone who was a master; otherwise it could be just as dangerous to its owner as to its opponent. In order to utilize this weapon to its fullest capacity, its creator had to perfect an esoteric form of fighting.

During the ritual of building this weapon, he went for days without food, sleep, or water. Creating this weapon was his rite of passage.

This Podracer was a Triffian who had three consecutive semi-pro victories on Malastare. He used his winnings to purchase a freighter that transported both him and his Podracer to Tatooine for the most famous of all Podracing events, the Boonta Eve Classic.

He was towed into a third-row starting position on the speedway of the Mos Espa Arena by a dewback. Although he didn't finish as glamorously as he had hoped, this Podracer came in fourth with a time of 16.04:994 and an average speed of 827 kph. He fared better than most—at least he crossed the finish line!

He had an enormous ego and therefore had the cockpit of his Podracer modified so that he was seated high on his acceleration chair, giving his fans maximum opportunity to gaze at him. His Podracer was blue, with split-X engines boasting fin-like steering vanes. His split-X engines were far less overpowering in size than Sebulba's; he favored sleekness over intimidation. In an effort to exert control over his powerful JAK Racing J930 Dash-8 engines, he tethered them to his cockpit. This evil mastermind lived and worked on Coruscant, center of the galaxy, plotting the downfall of the Republic and the Jedi Order right under their noses. He maneuvered events in the galaxy that would throw the Force out of balance and topple the revered Jedi from their pedestal for decades to come. Then, the Dark Lords of the Sith would return to glory.

He manipulated the Neimoidian Trade Federation into invading the planet Naboo. When Queen Amidala escaped his clutches, he unleashed his henchman to track her across the galaxy, and, in a bold move, revealed himself indirectly to the Jedi. They had cause for worry now that their worst and longest-standing adversaries, considered extinct for a millennium, were back in the galaxy.

His schemes with the Trade Federation seemed to have failed, thanks in part to Queen Amidala's devotion to her people and her recent allegiance with the Gungans. Long before Darth Sidious became the shadowy master of its ancient power and used it to attack the Galactic Republic, many fell prey to the dark side's allure. To make sure that power struggles would never again destroy the Sith order, he dictated that a Sith Lord could only take one apprentice and that they would work together for the downfall of the Jedi. DRESSED WITH STAR WARS

The Jedi Council had given Anakin Skywalker a solo assignment: He and Senator Amidala were to disguise themselves as refugees and take unregistered transport to Naboo, where he would protect her from potential assassination attempts. Anakin told the council that the Senator would resist leaving Coruscant before she could address the Senate regarding the act she had come to strike down, but Mace Windu told him to speak to Chancellor Palpatine about the situation. At Amidala's apartment, Anakin and Amidala talked as she packed for their journey. As Amidala complained about her orders to return to Naboo, Anakin countered, "Sometimes we must let go of our pride and do what is requested of us."

This bounty hunter worked alongside the legendary Jango Fett to break into a maximum-security asteroid prison to free fellow bounty hunter Bendix Fust. Fitted with a malleable armorweave suit, this killer created a reputation across the galaxy as one of the deadliest bounty hunters. Some believed the hunter to be a Stennes Shifter working incognito, while others whispered that the skilled killer was actually a Shi'ido. No one knew for certain, though. So admired was Count Dooku that he had been memorialized by a bronzium bust placed in the Archives of the Jedi Temple. Although he had never sat on the Jedi Council, he was well respected throughout the Jedi Order. His expertise as a lightsaber instructor had been invaluable—he was a master of a classical, elegant form of combat.

Having studied the ways of the Force for almost eight decades, he became one of its most powerful practitioners. Truer to his own sense of right and wrong than to the protocols of the Jedi Order, he began to be a voice of dissent in the Order—a voice that had trickled down to his former Padawan, Qui-Gon Jinn. Finally, Count Dooku announced his resignation from the Jedi Order, stating that he could no longer serve a Republic he saw as mired in corruption. Although several Council members agreed that the government needed reform, they argued that to leave the Order would be to turn their backs on those they had sworn to protect.

Anakin, Padmé, and Obi-Wan had all been brought out into the middle of the execution arena and had been sentenced to be killed by three ferocious beasts. The three had managed to escape their shackles and were holding their own against the creatures—two were dead and the third had been subdued. Anakin, Obi-Wan, and Padmé were all on the creature's back, apparently victorious, when droidekas rolled into the arena and surrounded them. Surrounded, they had little hope of escaping. Then, looking up into the arena, they saw lightsabers igniting. The Jedi had arrived.

Just when they thought they were safe, hundreds of battle droids, super battle droids, and droidekas marched into the arena, making their plight much worse. "There's been some mistake! I'm programmed for etiquette—not destruction!" the confused C-3PO said as he marched with the battle droid troops onto the field. This being rose to be one of the most prominent businesspeople in the galaxy, heading a massive galactic organization involved in the acquisition, refinement, and reselling of raw materials. This organization was so powerful that it had its own private army.

When a worldwide economic depression decimated her homeworld, her species brutally butchered each other for the things they used to take for granted, like food, jobs, and offworld travel. A mixed blessing occurred when an offworld concern came to the ravaged planet's rescue, buying up devalued real estate and boosting the planet's economy. What did this massive organization want in return? The servitude of the planet's native people, of course.

Before Jedi hopefuls were chosen as Padawans, they lived in communal groups called "clans." There were generally ten different clans in residence at one time, under the blanket care of Jedi Master Yoda. In addition to Master Yoda's overall interest, each clan was assigned a Master of its own.

These younglings varied in age from four to eight and belonged to many different species. The Force-sensitive children were too young to be sent offworld on missions, but from time to time they were transferred to training centers on different planets, such as the Jedi training center on Kamparas.

Younglings were trained in the lightsaber arts at a very young age. These beings live in giant underground hive colonies in order to escape the notice of the large predators that roam the surface of their planet. Their hives are built upon pre-existing natural structures that have been modified with a paste created from excretions and rock powder.

This species is born into a strict caste system with three main groups: aristocrats, warriors, and drones. The aristocrats and warriors are fortunate enough to have been born with wings, while the drones are flightless. The warriors grow to adulthood very quickly and are ready for battle by age six. They are trained to act en masse and to be fearless in battle, making them an excellent defense force. They carry sonic blasters.

The wingless drones have been genetically altered into several subgroups, each with a particular occupational focus. Overseer drones manage service, labor, soldier, farmer, and maker drones. The latest drone type is the pilot drone, which is in itself a caste. From their pupa stage, they pair with a flight computer and develop specific skills to make their actual adult flights more coordinated. This species plays an integral role in the Clone Wars. These mysterious beings travel the barren wastelands of Tatooine in nomadic tribes. They live in temporary utrya, tents made from skins, tendons, and organic matter they scavenge from the desert floor, and set up semipermanent camps during the planet's hottest months. Scattered across Tatooine's vast desert, they tend to roam the most barren wastes of the planet, areas where human settlers would surely perish.

They are vicious enemies of Tatooine's moisture farmers, with whom they fight for the planet's most precious and rare of elements—water. They have been known to slaughter anyone foolish enough to venture near their wells, which they consider sacred. They have even been rumored to spit streams of blood at their enemies.

Their all-enveloping clothing allows them to blend into the desert's expanse with ease. Any member of the tribe foolish enough to expose his or her skin is immediately banished, and in some extreme cases, killed. The male and female adults have distinguishing wardrobes, while the children, who are called Uli-ah, wear unisex garments that protect them from the brutal weather of Tatooine while conserving body moisture.

This testy species hails from the Mid Rim planet Ando and is legendary throughout the galaxy for a bad temper that seems to be pervasive. This species is well suited to its homeworld, being able to breathe both in the murky waters that cover the majority of the planet and on the few rocky outcroppings and swampy islands. The species is known for having thick tusks that protrude downward from the mouth. They have large, black eyes designed for sharp underwater vision and they tend to avoid bright lights at all costs.

There are three races within this species. The Aquala have fin-like hands reminiscent of their watery ancestors; they are able to operate on land but prefer to stay close to a water source. The Quara, the least prominent race, have fingered hands and more-developed motor skills. The Ualaq have fingered hands and a secondary set of eyes. The Quara and Ualaq tend to have a grey or black skin tone, while the Aquala's skin tone is dark green to blue.

During a meeting of the Jedi Council, Ki-Adi-Mundi brought up the plight of Kashyyyk, which had recently been overrun by the droid armies of the Confederacy of Independent Systems. The lush, forested world of Kashyyyk served as a pivotal planet in the Clone Wars. It was close to a major trade route for the southwestern quadrant of the galaxy and housed an important navigation and communications relay station. The Jedi, spread out as they were throughout the galaxy, realized that Kashyyyk was too important a planet to allow it to fall to the enemy.

Master Yoda volunteered to oversee the battle on Kashyyyk, stressing that he had good relations with the native

Wookiees. A Wookiee greeted him as he headed offworld toward Kashyyyk and the impending battle.

Jedi Masters Quinlan Vos and Luminara Unduli were heavily involved in the initial defenses of the Wookiee planet Kashyyyk. The Wookiee who had escorted Yoda from Coruscant to Kashyyyk worked very closely with Masters Vos and Unduli to set up initial defenses and allocate the Wookiees to different areas of defense. He served as direct liaison for Master Yoda and considered Yoda to be a member of his honor family.

Chancellor Palpatine told Anakin Skywalker that General Grievous' location had been discovered, and Anakin at once delivered the news, which was key to the Republic's victory, to the Jedi Council. As the Council discussed the matter, Anakin told them that the Chancellor wanted him to lead the attack against the dreaded Grievous. "The Council will make up its own mind who is to go, not the Chancellor," Mace Windu declared.

"A Master is needed with more experience," Yoda added. The group then voted that Obi-Wan Kenobi would lead the mission to the decisive planet and bring an end to the fighting.

"You're going to need me on this one, Master," Anakin told his mentor afterward. Obi-Wan agreed, but then stressed that the mission could turn out to be a false lead. The two old friends then parted ways and Obi-Wan boarded a Star Destroyer bound for the Outer Rim.

Polis Massans are strange, featureless beings native to the Subterrel Sector who obsessively mine the asteroid field they have colonized, known as Polis Massa, for clues as to its history. The planet Polis Massa was reduced to rubble by some unknown catastrophe in the distant past, and very few clues remain as to its original inhabitants. In addition to being compulsive archaeologists, the Polis Massans are also skilled xenobiologists, studying alien species and their cultures. Although interested in alien beings, Polis Massans tend to study from afar instead of confronting or capturing their subjects.

In a rare departure from their standoffish behavior, the Polis Massans did make contact and exchange information with one alien species, who gave them the knowledge to create clones, among other things.

When researching a planet in the Subterrel sector, the Polis Massans used a weapon given to them by the natives in order to fend off the planet's wild beasts. While there, they ran into a being who, in turn, used what he learned from the Polis Massans to help Obi-Wan Kenobi solve a mystery that would have a huge impact on the history of the Galactic Republic. The ancestors of this tranquil species were predators who hunted in packs, leaving their descendants the tendency to live in large communal groups in the dense forests and valleys of their homeworld. This species still hunts in large packs, and as a communal tribe, every being is expected to participate in the hunt in some way, including all children old enough to grasp weapons. As a result of their upbringing, this species believes that anyone not willing or able to participate in the communal hunts should be left to die

This species is proud of its hunts and wears trophies of its kills in the forms of skins, teeth, and bones, some fashioned into elaborate jewelry pieces that form an important part of their rites of passage. Particularly important are the teeth of the akul, a deadly carnivore that stalks the planet. Only a member of this species who has killed an akul by himself or herself has the privilege to wear the teeth as a sign of bravery.

This species has evolved to blend in with the natural environment on their planet. Their skin acts as a natural camouflage in their homeworld's thigh-high turu-grass, which is generally black, red, and white in color. What species is it?

These cold-blooded quadrupeds are most active during the day, searching for food in the rocky terrain of their home-world. As vegetarians, they prefer eating the green algae that grows on the rocks in the wetter portions of their world, or snacking on arterial roots dug from porous rocks in arid climates.

They are well equipped for life on their unusual planet. Their five-digit feet have large claws that enable them to climb easily and rapidly. Their heads have armor-plated skulls as well as giant beaks, and their necks are extremely flexible. They have ridges of defensive spines down their backs. While generally docile creatures, they can be extremely dangerous if provoked. Females in particular are very protective of their eggs, which other species native to the planet prey upon.

Anakin Skywalker had fallen to the dark side, and his new Master had sent him on a very important mission involving the Separatists. The Wookiee planet Kashyyyk was pivotal in the struggle for victory in the battle-torn Republic. Its strategic location was so important to the Republic that although Jedi Master Luminara Unduli was already on Kashyyyk directing clone troops, Master Yoda left Coruscant to oversee what the Jedi Council knew would be a major battle.

Kashyyyk was important primarily because of its closeness to a major hyperspace trade route, and more urgently, an important navigation and communications relay station. The Claatuvac Guild, located in Kachirho, was an organization of Wookiee cartographers that maintained and updated hyperspace route surveys and kept the galaxy navigable.

It was also said that the Claatuvac Guild's ancient archives contained information so thorough that long-forgotten routes, gone from the Republic's hyperspace charts, were still maintained in their databases. If the Separatists were to get their hands on these ancient charts, giving them access to information that the Republic didn't know existed, their ability to overtake the galaxy would become that much easier.

Anakin and Obi-Wan were recalled from the Outer Rim sieges after a catastrophe occurred—General Grievous had managed to evade the Jedi and kidnap Chancellor Palpatine. Anakin Skywalker had blasted the shield generator on General Grievous's ship, the Invisible Hand, so that he and Obi-Wan Kenobi could land on the ship and save Chancellor Palpatine from the Separatists. While the Millennium Falcon was soaring through hyperspace toward its destination, Luke Skywalker was practicing his lightsaber skills with a remote. The tiny ball zoomed through the air randomly, emitting short, sharp shocks that Luke tried to evade or strike with his lightsaber.

While Luke was training, Obi-Wan felt a disturbance in the Force, as if millions of voices had suddenly cried out in terror and then were suddenly silenced. He felt that something terrible had happened. Not wanting to scare Luke, he told the boy to get on with his training. This scruffy, angry-looking being had spent his entire life on the desert planet Tatooine. His parents deserted him on the desolate planet, which could have explained his angry demeanor. He graduated from a bartending correspondence school and was hired to work in one of the seedier, yet immensely popular, cantinas on Tatooine, which attracted galactic denizens of all species and sizes.

This Corellian native was brought up in outer Gus Treta, a spaceport owned by his parents. When much of the spaceport was destroyed by a craft piloted by suspected criminals who were attempting to escape and had forgotten to release their mooring clamps, this Corellian was left an orphan. He used his first vessel, a stock light freighter, in his attempts to become a smuggler or gunrunner. Fortunately, he was not successful at either endeavor, and he turned his piloting skills into a career with the Rebel Alliance.

He fought valiantly in the Battle of Yavin up until the final moments, at which point he conceded to Luke Skywalker that he could no longer fight because his ship was not functioning properly. "I'm hit! I can't stay with you," the pilot called to Luke

Some scientists believe that this diminutive, humanoid species, which evolved from rodents, eventually became bipedal from reaching for the lichens and fungi that grow on cave walls. These beings emit a foul, rancid odor that is difficult for other beings to stand, but they don't seem to mind it at all. To protect themselves, they cover themselves head to toe in homemade cloaks with hoods.

These beings live in tight clans. Each one of their vessels, in which they live, travel, and work, can hold up to three hundred members of a single clan. The clans come together annually to share stories, swap goods, and even trade sons and daughters, referring to their children as "marriage merchandise." They have come to believe that trading children for marriage with other clans will keep their bloodlines [illegible] importance on family. They revere their heritage and ancestry so much that their language includes forty-three different terms to describe relationship, lineage, and bloodline.

The most important member of each clan is referred to as the shaman, a female who is said to be able to see the future. This species hails from the Tyrius system in the galaxy's Mid Rim, and are known for their prowess as hunters. To their advantage in that field, they have multifaceted eyes that can see heat emanating from their prey even in darkness. They also have long, tapered snouts that serve as filters for their incredibly developed sense of smell. Their coloring allows them to blend in with vegetation.

This species emits an odor that most other species find revolting. This scent is actually a pheromonal excretion that attracts others of the species and also indicates the individual's family heritage to others in the species. This odor is particularly important to members of this species because their society is built around clans. Family units have been important to this species since their ancestors first built primitive tools to protect themselves. Since that time, this species has developed a love of hunting so strong that they never acquired any agricultural tendencies. They have hunted all of the natural prey on their planet to extinction, so they have to import most of their food from offworld.

These creatures' bodies, aside from their extremities, are one giant stomach sac and digestive system. They can unhinge their jaws to swallow things that are much larger than their body size and their bodies stretch to accommodate these larger food items. Their digestive system contains powerful acids that break down things that most other creatures would find indigestible. Depending on the situation, this feature can make these creatures either very handy to have around or the cause of nightmares.

These creatures are not sentient but have been shown through research to display traits that show some form of intelligence. They have the ability to discern between food items and to migrate from one home to another. They also can tell the difference between living and dead creatures. Dead creatures are their preferred form of food, but that does not mean they won't consume a living being if no dead animals are available.

These creatures are self-fertilizing. When they lay eggs, their larvae are microscopic and form colonies. Most of them are generally passive unless attacked or startled. What are they?

Planned since before the advent of the Clone Wars, the Death Star was considered the Empire's ultimate weapon. The Emperor wanted to use this doomsday device to impose his version of order throughout the galaxy. Surely, he thought, no one would defy him after witnessing the unlimited destructive power he held within his grasp.

The project had been funded largely by the agents of the Confederacy of Independent Systems—in particular, the Trade Federation, the InterGalactic Banking Clan, and the Techno Union. Unbeknownst to most, the Republic itself had also funded the project, although unwillingly. The Death Star was constructed in secret in the Outer Rim of the galaxy, utilizing engineers and scientists from all over the galaxy, including beings from Geonosis, Ryloth, Eriadu, and Fondor.

The Rebel heroes had, as they thought, evaded the Imperials and escaped the Death Star. As they landed on Yavin 4, they immediately took R2-D2 away in order to analyze the information he had so bravely carried throughout their adventures. General Dodonna then used R2-D2's information to brief the Rebel forces on their plan of attack. As Dodonna revealed the only way to destroy the station, many Rebels shifted nervously. "Chewbacca here is first mate in a ship that might suit us," Obi-Wan Kenobi said as he helped Luke up from a misunderstanding the farmboy'd just had with a grumpy Aqualish. Chewbacca led the Jedi Master and the boy over to a table where the ship's captain, Han Solo, was sitting.

"Chewie here tells me you're looking for passage to the Alderaan system," Han said to Obi-Wan Kenobi.

"Yes, indeed. If it's a fast ship," Kenobi replied. The two haggled over terms and then came to an agreement. Solo told Kenobi that they'd leave as soon as the passengers were ready, and told them which docking bay to go to.

When the Empire took control of the company that manufactured this ship, technicians and suppliers under the company's employ defected to the Rebellion, taking their ships' prototypes with them. The Rebellion began manufacturing these ships in small numbers, and the ships became integral to the Alliance's fleet. These ships became known for their speed and agility, as well as their ability to absorb substantial damage.

Each of the ships' wings contains a Taim & Bak KX9 laser cannon, which can be fired individually, simultaneously, in pairs, or other combinations. The ships also carry proton torpedoes, which are ejected from Krupx MG7 launchers located near the ships' bottoms.

These ships contain life-support systems that can last up to a week in non-combat situations, and GBK-585 motivator hyperspace control units. There is a motivator on each of the ships' engines. In the event of emergencies, the ships also have ejection seats to throw pilots clear of the fighters.

A harried Imperial officer rushed toward Darth Vader inside the Death Star, orbiting the planet Yavin above the Rebel Base, alerting the Dark Lord to the small Rebel ships attacking the Death Star. According to the officer, the ships' size made them difficult to attack with turbolasers.

"We'll have to destroy them ship to ship," Darth Vader instructed. "Get the crews to their fighters." TIE fighters soon besieged the Rebel pilots, decimating their forces.

Now the Death Star was almost in range of the Rebel base, spelling almost certain doom for the Rebellion. After R2-D2 had led Luke Skywalker and C-3PO to Obi-Wan Kenobi, Obi-Wan took them to his home. He told Luke about his father's demise and gave Luke his father's lightsaber. Then R2-D2 played a message for Obi-Wan from Princess Leia asking him to transport R2-D2 to Bail Organa on Alderaan. R2-D2 was carrying information vital to the Rebellion, and Leia's ship had been attacked by the Empire, so she couldn't complete the mission. Leia begged Obi-Wan to take over. "This is our most desperate hour," she said via hologram. "Help me, Obi-Wan Kenobi. You're my only hope." With that, the message faded.

Luke said he would take Obi Wan to Anchorhead, but then he had to get home. On the way, they happened upon the sandcrawler from which Owen had purchased R2-D2 and C-3PO. "What an incredible smell you've discovered!" Han Solo snapped after landing in the trash compactor on the Death Star. Princess Leia had come up with the bright idea of blasting through a vent and jumping into the garbage chute, but the door to the chute was magnetically sealed.

"It could be worse," Princess Leia replied, but she spoke too soon—the walls of the compactor came smashing in toward each other. As they scrambled to come up with a way to escape the mess, C-3PO finally remembered to turn his comlink back on and contacted Luke, who screamed at him to shut down all garbage smashers on the detention level. C-3PO managed to get R2-D2 to send down the trash compactor and open the door.

The two met in an empty hallway, Darth Vader's lightsaber blazing red. "The circle is now complete," Darth Vader said as Kenobi ignited his lightsaber. "When I left you, I was but the learner. Now I am the master."

Han Solo, Princess Leia, Chewbacca, and C-3PO were seeking a safe haven in which they could hide from Darth Vader, who was bent on capturing the Millennium Falcon. So obsessed had the Dark Lord become by the idea of capturing the Rebels that he had sent his fleet into harm's way by following the elusive ship into a deadly asteroid field.

The Millennium Falcon had evaded the Imperial fleet, and Darth Vader was losing patience. No longer relying on his own troops, Vader had brought in a group of mercenaries and offered a large sum to whoever could bring in Han Solo and his crew. As Vader was going over regulations with the bounty hunters, primarily his desire to have Solo's crew delivered to him alive, Admiral Piett piped up. "My Lord, we have them."

After taking refuge in what Han Solo had mistakenly thought to be a safe haven, the Millennium Falcon had blasted out of the asteroid field and now had the Star Destroyer Avenger on its tail. The smaller ship had suffered heavy damage and was unable to blast into hyperspace. Captain Solo, always resourceful, chose an alternate means of escape. "Turn the ship around," he commanded. "I said turn her around!" With that, Chewbacca aimed the Falcon directly at the Star Destroyer.

Admiral Ozzel took the Imperial fleet out of lightspeed close to the Hoth system, believing that an element of surprise would hinder the Rebels' chances of escape. They found, however, a shield protecting the ice planet, which made an attack from space impossible. Not to be deterred, Darth Vader ordered General Veers to ready his troops for a surface attack, before taking Admiral Ozzel to task for the final time in the Admiral's shaky career.

On the surface, General Veers was commanding one of the large transports lumbering toward the Rebel base. His main goal was to target and destroy the generator creating the protective shield. Certain members of this alien species have a very rare gift and are revered by other members of their species and denizens of the galaxy for their skills. These beings perform divine rituals and interpret omens that have been sent to them in order to track prey. They are hired throughout the galaxy based on these mystical powers and have been used as bounty hunters, assassins, advisors, and bodyguards. Although some think the powers of this species are overrated, their track record speaks for itself.

Some sects in this religious order maintain the need for chemical baths or genetic tampering in order to be true hunters. The genetic tampering causes knob-like growths to protrude from the beings' chitinous exoskeletons, which the beings use as weapons.

These beings can be identified by their weapon of choice, which is a staff that ends in a V-shaped pair of electrically charged prods. Most members of this species require little or no sleep, which means that these mystical hunters can spend that much more time reading omens and tracking their prey. Which species is this?

These beings hatch from eggs and are raised in clutches. When they emerge, they already have the ability to walk and exhibit the basic instinct that is the most important aspect of their culture. When they are two years old, their parents take them out into the world and teach them the skills they will need in order to survive in their society. By the age of ten, most members of this species are already highly skilled.

Male members of this species perform basically one task: they hunt. They are awarded points for every successful hunting mission. These points, referred to as "jagannath points" in their society, are very important—the more points a member of this species accumulates, the higher the esteem he has in society.

The males with the most jagannath points are considered to be viable mates. When they return from their hunts, they mate with females, or clutch mothers, who then lay eggs and watch over them until they hatch. Luke Skywalker and Han Solo were out patrolling the perimeter of Echo Base when Luke spotted what he assumed was a meteor landing nearby. Han contacted him and told him that he was returning to base, and Luke responded that he was going to check out the meteor crash site. After signing off, he noticed that his tauntaun was acting strangely. Before he knew it, his tauntaun had been mauled by a wampa and he was knocked unconscious.

Han Solo had defied logic and stormed headlong into an asteroid field in order to evade the pursuing Imperial fleet. Admiral Ozzel was in serious trouble with Darth Vader. The Admiral had taken his fleet out of lightspeed too close to the Hoth system, and the Rebel Alliance had been alerted to their presence. - D. Luke's next lesson 2017.

When Luke Skywalker didn't return from patrolling the perimeter of Echo Base, Princess Leia grew increasingly worried about him. She sent C-3PO to ask Han if he had seen Luke. Han hadn't seen him either and, realizing that Luke would be done for if he was injured in the freezing cold, went out to look for him, ignoring protests that it was too cold to continue the search.

Han went out into the blinding snow, hoping he would be able to find his friend before it was too late. He did find Luke, but Luke was injured and apparently delusional. Han was forced to set up a temporary shelter for the two of them, but they managed to make it through the night.

Boussh snaked stealthily through Jabba's throne room, trying very hard not to make a sound. The crime lord and his toadies were passed out all over, presumably after having had their fill of debauchery. Accidentally bumping a wind chime, the bounty hunter steadied it before heading across the main floor toward the space where Captain Solo's frozen frame hung from the wall.

Sneaking up alongside the block of carbonite, the masked hunter fiddled with the controls on the side panel, causing the block to lower to the floor with a thud. Boussh deactivated the carbon freeze, and Solo began to thaw out, his frozen, pained expression giving way to live flesh. Completely free of the carbonite, Solo slid to the floor in a quivering heap. Trembling, the Rebel hero asked, "Where am I?"

Boussh replied, "Jabba's palace." Boussh went on to tell Solo what the effects of being frozen in carbonite were and that he would be back to normal soon.

The Ewoks accepted the Rebels and committed to help them defeat the Empire on Endor. They led the Rebel ground troops to a secret back entrance to the bunker from which the shield protecting the second Death Star was emanating. As Han Solo, Princess Leia, C-3PO, and R2-D2 were contemplating how they were going to get past the guards protecting the entrance, an Ewok rashly created a diversion that led most of the troopers away from the bunker. Free to proceed, the Rebel troops snuck down to the side and Solo tapped a soldier on the shoulder, leading him over to the Rebel troops, who captured him.

This being defiantly battled Luke Skywalker, Han Solo, Chewbacca, and Lando Calrissian, launching himself from Jabba's sail barge onto the skiff with the prisoners. He tried to fire on Luke Skywalker, but Luke sliced the being's blaster in two with his lightsaber. The being then bound Skywalker with rope that he shot from one of his various tools, but Luke managed to free himself from that as well. He met his match when his arch-nemesis, Han Solo, still disabled from the carbonite freeze, accidentally hit him in the back and sent him flying into the sarlacc's waiting beak.

Inside the sarlacc, fibrous suckers attached themselves to his body and kept him alive, maintaining his consciousness while extracting moisture. He struggled to maintain his identity as his body was filled with the toxins that the sarlacc used to keep its prey alive yet dependent. Finally managing the strength to escape, he proved that his reputation was warranted by managing to get back to the surface of the dune sea, where he passed out, bloody and barely alive.

Imperial records state that this officer had recently been promoted to Director of Imperial Energy Systems, although this was merely a front. Allegedly, he was responsible for overseeing a new sub-department of the Ministry of Energy, which would develop large-scale portable power plants for disaster relief. In reality, he had been charged with the top-secret construction of a second Death Star, superior to the battle station destroyed during the Battle of Yavin.

Although this being didn't know it, the Emperor's sole reason for constructing this second Death Star was to lure the Rebellion to its doom. The Emperor knew that when the Rebellion heard of this second superweapon, they would stop at nothing to make sure it wasn't completed. In fact, the Emperor was so smug that he had taken it upon himself to be there when the battle began, so he could watch the Rebellion's destruction firsthand.

The Rebels had fallen for the Emperor's trap, and young Skywalker was on board the new Death Star. This close advisor to Jabba the Hutt had been employed by him for nearly forty years at the time that Luke Skywalker and the Rebel Alliance leaders toppled Jabba's crime empire. Although he worked tirelessly for Jabba, he also despised him and wished for nothing more than Jabba's death.

He had been born in the Una clan on his homeworld. A very industrious youth, he amassed considerable wealth by trafficking ryll spice offworld. Dabbling in contraband trading had its price, however, and his actions brought slavers to his home planet. Other beings on his planet were disgusted by his actions, and he was sentenced to death. These amphibious beings have long, slender legs and arms that attach to plump, squat bodies. Their skin is patterned in yellows, browns, and greens, allowing them to blend in with the rainforest environment on their home planet. Their oddest feature is their lips, which are almost human.

Their bodies are perfectly adapted for the marshes and rainforests of their planet. Their long legs make wading through water in search of food very easy for these beings, and the formation of their mouths allows them to snack on marlello duck eggs with ease, puncturing the shells with their tongues and sucking the yolks through their mouths. In order to evade predators, these beings can almost entirely submerge themselves while being able to keep their eyes, on bulbs atop their heads, above the water so they know when it's safe to resurface. They reproduce by laying eggs that the females will guard in their homes until the eggs hatch. Children are raised in agrarian, feudal-style communities.

These beings are somewhat primitive, and singing is a religious ritual to them. The few who go offworld tend to make their way in show business, as seen in Jabba's palace. Which species is this?

A mystery throughout the galaxy, these beings are highly intelligent, but their logic is almost completely incomprehensible to the galaxy at large. Would-be philosophers amuse themselves by trying to decipher this species' great works, generally with little success. This species's language makes it even more difficult to understand: it is a strange manipulation of phonemic pulses of energy, into which they insert syntactic contours. Some members of this species have learned to communicate directly with the neurons of other beings, but that generally necessitates direct contact.

These beings reproduce asexually by vomiting out their stomach linings, creating pupal beings that in turn grow into full-sized individuals. They can also reproduce by means of mutual tongue grooming, which creates new individuals exhibiting traits of both parent beings. Mostly stomach, these beings eat constantly, extracting nutrients from almost anything they touch. They contain two brains—one specifically designed to aid with digestion, and one for reasoning purposes.

Distinguishable by their long tongues, these beings affix themselves to surfaces and eat. One was seen near the ceiling in Jabba's palace. Which species is this?

Luke Skywalker had entered Jabba's palace and attempted to get to the Hutt crime lord through Jedi mind control. Laughing at his attempt, Jabba made it quite clear that Jedi tricks would not be effective on him. He sprang open the trap door in the floor in front of his dais, and Luke went tumbling to the pit below, along with an unfortunate guard who had been standing in the wrong place at the wrong time.

Squealing and terrified, the guard was an easy catch for the rancor, who grabbed the guard and shoved him into its mouth. As the rancor chewed on the last visible piece of the guard, he turned his gaze to his other victim, who was trying very hard to remain calm.

Running first to what looked like an exit, Luke discovered bars blocking the doorway. Chaos had overtaken Jabba's sail barge. The party that had zoomed out to the dune sea to watch as Luke Skywalker and his friends were thrown into the sarlacc pit had gotten an unexpected surprise when Luke Skywalker retrieved his lightsaber, freed his companions, and began to fight the guards trying to throw him into the gaping beak of the creature below.

Inside Jabba's sail barge, Princess Leia had taken the opportunity to join the fight by smashing a control panel, throwing the deck into darkness. As Jabba's henchmen ran everywhere, Leia tried to free herself from Jabba's clutches with R2-D2's help.

ne revolting gangster Jabba the Hutt, but he had never xpected that the message would involve being a gift to the nfamous crime lord. "R2, you're playing the wrong mes-

Han Solo needed his mission on Endor to be a success. If he couldn't get to the shield bunker and deactivate it, then the entire Rebel fleet would be at risk. It took him some time to find Leia after she and Luke got separated chasing scout troopers on speeder bikes, and in the meantime he had gotten caught in a trap planted by the Ewoks. This had wasted a considerable amount of time, but he was relieved at last to find that Leia was alive and safe with the Ewoks. His presence on Endor was endangering the Rebels' mission, and he knew that in order to complete his training, he had to face Darth Vader a final time. Let's go back and tell Master Luke," he said hopefully

Just then, a small, round hatch opened, and out popped an optical lens with optical shutters attached to a hydraulic lift. It began jabbering at C-3PO in Huttese. Taken aback, C-3PO exclaimed, "Goodness gracious me!" before launching into a Huttese explanation of their mission.

"Artoo detoowha bo Seethreepiowha eya toota odd mischka Jabba du Hutt," C-3PO said tentatively, only to be guffawed at before the eye retracted and the hatch snapped shut. The ground battle on the forest moon of Endor was going very poorly, and it appeared that the Rebels might be defeated. Han Solo and Princess Leia stood at the back door of the bunker, trying desperately to enter the code to get the door open so they could plant charges inside and destroy the shield generator. When the Mon Calamari officially joined the Rebe Alliance, they brought with them a fleet of large, sturdy ships that would become an integral part of the Alliance's fleet from that point on

On top of that, Jabba's Desilijic Syndicate had been dissolved, making the galaxy a slightly safer place. Now Luke was on his way to make good on his promise—he was going back to Dagobah to finish his training with Jedi Master Yoda.

When he arrived at Yoda's cabin, Luke found the Jedi Master in poor health, struggling to walk and having difficulty breathing. The ancient Jedi made light of the situation, joking even as he struggled to get into his bed. "Master Yoda, you can't die," Luke pleaded with his instructor.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

"A long time ago, in a galaxy far, far away . . ." Ever since I saw those fateful words on the screen for the first time on opening day in 1977, I have, truly, been obsessed with Star Wars. My family saw that movie together countless times—it became more than a movie for us. That Christmas, my mother and my Aunt Margaret sewed Jedi robes for both my cousin Justin and me, and found what were apparently the only two lightsaber toys in existence at that time (non-licensed, even). We were Jedi that Christmas, and the feeling has never left. With each film, my adoration grew, culminating in what I never even considered would happen—actually working at Skywalker Ranch with an amazing group of people. After leaving Lucasfilm, I stayed in touch, and jumped at the chance when Amy Gary asked me to work on this project.

I'd like to thank Kjersti Egerdahl for being a fabulous and patient editor, Frank Parisi, Amy Gary, Steve Korté, Lucy Autrey Wilson for introducing me to the world of Lucasfilm, Steve Sansweet and Sue Rostoni for being supportive in the face of adversity, Alice Alfonsi for starting it all, Sarah Hines Stephens and Jane Mason, Pablo Hidalgo, Leland Chee, all of the Star Wars authors whose work inspired these questions, George Lucas, and my parents—Frances and Jeff Harper, who have put up with and fostered many obsessions over the years.
